NIWA, Catalyst IT, and EBSCO

Ebsco Plugin

from Gunilla Jensen at the National Institute of Water and Atmospheric Research (NIWA)

The New Zealand National Institute of Water and Atmospheric Research (NIWA) conduct environmental science to enable the sustainable management of natural resources. The NIWA Library switched to Koha in 2012 as their library management system. On 8 April 2014 NIWA's Library implemented a brand new Koha plugin, that integrates EBSCO Discovery Service (EDS) into Koha retaining the features of the Koha public interface. NIWA's Library staff have been working with EBSCO and Catalyst IT and are excited to be first in the world to do this integration.

The result can be seen in action at <https://library.niwa.co.nz>. A dropdown menu enable the user to search the native catalogue or EDS by selecting the appropriate option. At NIWA the default search has been set to the EDS. The Plugin also supports applying EDS items in the cart. EBSCO licensing and publishing terms require users to authenticate themselves for EDS results to display.

If interested in this plugin, your library must be subscribed to EDS. There is a relatively small amount of work to do in Koha to configure the plugin. You can find the install instructions here.

Research Starter: Syrian Civil War.

Unlike civil wars that result from religious and ethnic divisions within a country, Syria has traditionally had a relatively homogenous society. In 2016, more than 90 percent of the more than 17 million people living in Syria were Arabs and around three-fourths were Sunni Muslims. The civil war began in 2011 as rural and small-town Syrians, most of them between the ages of twenty and forty, banded together in peaceful demonstrations to protest denial of rights and widespread political corruption. On July 29, 2011, the protests became violent with the entry of armed rebels. Calling themselves the Free Syrian Army, the armed rebels soon gained control of the movement. Violence intensified with the entry of foreign elements into the war. Russia intervened, sending in forces, planes, and weapons to assist President Bashar al-Assad in reasserting his authority. Arab militants from surrounding countries also flocked to Syria, expressing their goal of advancing jihad, protecting their own interests, or gaining control of Syrian territory at war's end. Thus, the Syrian Free Army has been forced to battle not only government forces but also the notorious Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), the Kurdish militia from Turkey, North Caucasians, Shi'ite fighters from Iraq and Iran, and Lebanese Hezbollah.... 2. Snowmelt response to simulated climate change gradient, southern Sierra Nevada, California.

Authors: Musselman, Keith N.1,2 keith.musselman@noaa.gov
Source: Cryosphere. 2017, Vol. 11 Issue 10, pp. 3071-3086

FIG. 1. DJF precipitation change measures in CMIP5 models for the end of the century (2070–99 average) relative to a base period of 1961–90 under the RCP8.5 forcing scenario. (a) Multimodel ensemble mean (15 models) precipitation change (mm day^{-1}). Red line shows the 3 mm day^{-1} contour from the MME mean base period climatology; dashed and dot-dashed lines show the same contour from the GPCP and CMAP datasets (1979–2008), respectively. Regions that do not pass a significance test for the MME mean relative to internal variability at the 95% level (see text) are cross-hatched. (b) Agreement on the sign of precipitation change among the model ensemble. Blue and green colors indicate a higher number of models (out of 15) agreeing on positive precipitation change; red colors indicate agreement on a negative precipitation change. Grid points with ≥ 10 models agreeing on sign pass a binomial test at the 94% level (see text); grid points not passing at this level are left blank. The box indicates the region used for averaging in later figures.
